Tea industry's sales revenues to crimp

Production and exports to fall, prices to weaken

The tea industry is likely to face multiple headwinds in the ongoing tea year January-December 2023. While, tea production prospects are likely to remain bleak, challenges to export to important markets like Iran and a partial recovery in Sri Lankan tea production are expected to hurt volumes and domestic tea prices in the near term. This is likely to crimp the top line performance of the industry in the June 2023 quarter and the subsequent quarters of the year. The bottom line performance of the industry is also expected to deteriorate during these quarters.

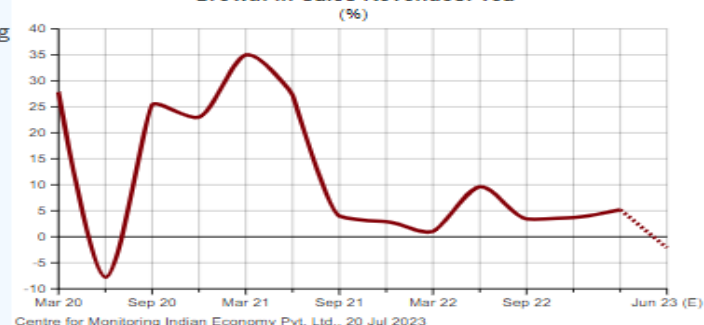

Sales revenues of the tea industry are likely to have slipped for the first time in almost two years. The industry is likely to have reported a two per cent fall in revenues in the June 2023 quarter due to lower volumes and weak tea prices. Sedate volumes and lower realisations are expected to impact the industry's revenues even in next two quarters of the tea year 2023.

A likely fall in exports coupled with a drop in first flush tea
